What is the concept of visual identity design

The essence of a brand is the cohesive look and feel of your organization. It is "the name, term, design, symbol, or other feature that identifies your good or service and is distinct from those offered by other sellers"

Visual identity is not only the physical or visual elements that represent your organization, but also the feeling that people feel when interacting with your business, marketing materials, products, services, team members, and physical sites

Visual identity, then, is the lasting impression you leave on customers and clients and is largely shaped by the visual identity you provide

What does a visual brand identity design include

Verbal slogan: It is the sentence that will indicate the importance of what your company offers to the public and it must be motivating and striking

Colors: You should never compromise with the color group that suits your company, for example, blue and white are suitable for tourism and travel companies, while red and yellow are suitable for restaurants, and so on in the rest of the colors

Value: Never neglect any element of the commercial identity because neglecting any element loses the commercial identity its value and the strength of the visual identity lies in linking it to a high value sought by the public

How is a business identity built

We mentioned in the introduction to the article that the commercial identity is a set of elements and practices implemented by the project in order to demonstrate its presence and distinguish it from other projects, as well as to draw the attention of the consumer audience to the services or products it provides. This process takes place in several stages that must be worked on successively to build an appropriate commercial identity that is consistent with the policies, objectives and future vision of the project. first, who are you

Before starting to work on the elements of the commercial identity and before actually starting to build one for your project, you must have a clear vision of the identity of your project, and a full perception of what it is. To make it simpler, you need to answer the following questions

What is your vision for the project? How do you see the future of your project

Where does the project derive its value? What motivates you to continue working

What is your brand style? If your project was a person, what kind of character would it look like

What distinguishes your project from other competitor

What is your brand tone? How will you communicate with the audience

Second: Visual identity design

Once you have a complete understanding of your project and your identity and the detailed vision of these elements, you can start working on the design of the brand identity and its elements. Design is the silent part of your project or the visual message that does not contain words, but nonetheless conveys to the target audience a message about how good, efficient and professional your project is. Third: the content

After working on the visual identity or the visual aspect of the brand identity, it is imperative to move to the next step which is your communication with the audience, or in other words the content that you will use with your brand. Over time, as the customer and audience segments of your project expand, the content with which you communicate with the audience will become more and more important, and you will have to treat every written text and piece of content as if it were part of your brand identity.

How to look for a business identity design

Here are some steps that you should follow when searching for a business identity design such as

Focus on one message

Don't imitate others

Focus on the consistency of your business

The importance of brand identity design

Visual identity is a sign of trust and credibility for your company, because visual memory is better than analytical memory, which makes your visual identity what will be entrenched in the minds of your customers

Building a business identity, like any other marketing activity, is an ongoing and ongoing process that requires some monitoring and oversight to make sure everything is OK and going well. Here, you have to follow all aspects of the commercial identity, including the content, designs and language used, and then the interaction of users from an audience and customers with it, and to introduce any changes or updates that the commercial identity may require at some point based on this management and follow-up process

Business identity design steps

These steps will help you define your brand goals and mission to be able to connect your visual identity with your significant brand value

First, select your audience

Before you develop your brand to communicate with the audience, you need to determine who your audience will be with whom you will deal with and meet their needs, are they women or men? Is your audience middle class or wealthy? Is your audience children? Each audience has its own way of addressing it and thus the way you express and shape your visual identity. To define your audience, consider the following

What is your age, gender and job description

What does their character look like? What are their values, hobbies and interests

What kind of lifestyle do they lead

What solutions are they looking for

What other brands do they like

Second: Define your mission (what is the reason for your brand existence)

Once you have spent some time researching your audience, take some time to evaluate your company

What do you offer to your clients and customers? You need to think about the products and services that you offer, but you also need to think about how you offer those offerings and why You may be interested in seeing the visual identity

Ask yourself

Why do we offer these services and products

What do we wish to change for our customers

What improvements do we want to make in their lives

Why do we think it's important to do this

Third: Define your brand personality

When you have a good idea of your brand mission, select a brand personality that aligns with the following

What type of person would make a good image of your business? How will he speak? How will it look? A simple way to create a springboard for this imaginary brand representative is to ask yourself the question

If anyone could be a spokesperson for my brand, who would it be

Fourth: Develop the emotional appeal of your brand identity

Instilling feelings into your brand is how you connect deeply with potential customers and leave a lasting and memorable image in their minds

How do you want your audience to feel when they see your marketing materials

What emotions are triggered when your customers and customers use your products/services or interact with your brand

What are the feelings that lie at the heart of your brand story

Does it make sense for your brand to be associated with trust, fear, guilt, competition, affiliation, or any other emotional attraction

The answers to these questions are the building blocks of your brand marketing strategy

What are the differences between business identity and visual identity

What is the brand (Brand)? It is the image and impression that the company or organization as a whole reflects

What is Identity? : are the visual aspects that form part of the total brand

What is the Logo? Logo identifies a business or organization in its simplest form through the use of a sign or symbol

Many people confuse the commercial identity, the visual identity, and the commercial logo, but the difference between them is great, and each of them has a specific function. It also interferes with some that the logo is the visual identity, but the logo is a part of it, and each of them has different roles in order to form the tangible image of your business or product, you may be interested in learning about building electronic stores

One of the mistakes that a company owner or employee makes in e-marketing is confusing the visual identity with the brand. Many people think that the visual identity is the same as the brand, but let me tell you that this is wrong. There is a big difference between the visual identity and the brand.

The difference between the visual identity and the brand lies in that the visual identity is the user's guide through which this value is known, while the brand indicates the value of what the user gets

In the sense that a brand is all the actions that a company takes to create a state of awareness and to distance itself from the competition. And it expresses your behavior at work

As for the visual identity, it expresses the visual presence of your company, which includes the colors, the logo, the verbal slogans, the decoration, and even the staff's clothing, bags and covers, everything seen by others
